

International Co-op Day on the Internet

dotCoop, the sponsor of the .coop domain name for co-operatives, would like to join the ICA in commending co-ops on the effort being made world-wide to address the issues contributing to Climate Change. The Internet is a tool that allows for exchange of information without physical travel or paper and so helps reduce the need for consumption of related resources. It's great to know that co-ops are working to address issues of concern to everyone such as climate change.

On Saturday, July 5, .coop celebrated the 86th International Co-operative Day by turning the switch on a new www.coop site with a focus on providing the answers to the questions that people ask most about .coop. More information online makes it easier for co-ops everywhere to leave a smaller physical footprint than before.

Congratulations to the global co-operative community on International Co-operative Day.

Carolyn T. Hoover
Chief Executive Officer
DotCooperation LLC
Washington, DC, USA